the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over by 1.2 million (Office of National Statistics 1999). The number of people aged 85 and over is projected to increase by 1.5 million by the year 2020 (Office of National Statistics 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (1999) has published a strategy for the care of the elderly, which sets out a vision for the future of elderly care. The strategy is based on the following principles: (1) to ensure that elderly people are treated as individuals; (2) to ensure that elderly people are given the opportunity to live in their own homes; (3) to ensure that elderly people are given the opportunity to participate in decisions about their care; (4) to ensure that elderly people are given the opportunity to live in a community; (5) to ensure that elderly people are given the opportunity to live a full and active life.

The strategy also sets out a number of objectives for the future of elderly care. These include: (1) to reduce the number of elderly people who are institutionalized; (2) to increase the number of elderly people who live in their own homes; (3) to increase the number of elderly people who participate in decisions about their care; (4) to increase the number of elderly people who live in a community; (5) to increase the number of elderly people who live a full and active life.

The strategy also sets out a number of measures to be taken to achieve these objectives. These include: (1) to develop a network of community care services; (2) to develop a network of residential care services; (3) to develop a network of day care services; (4) to develop a network of home care services; (5) to develop a network of health care services.

The strategy also sets out a number of measures to be taken to ensure that elderly people are treated as individuals. These include: (1) to develop a network of individualized care services; (2) to develop a network of individualized care services; (3) to develop a network of individualized care services; (4) to develop a network of individualized care services; (5) to develop a network of individualized care services.

The strategy also sets out a number of measures to be taken to ensure that elderly people are given the opportunity to live in their own homes. These include: (1) to develop a network of home care services; (2) to develop a network of home care services; (3) to develop a network of home care services; (4) to develop a network of home care services; (5) to develop a network of home care services.
